GREEN CITY DISTRICT

This ongoing project integrates design, tech, and commerce for sustainable living, tackling housing, energy, and climate issues. Supported by educational institutions and a Dutch solar developer, it aims to create a sustainable city district in Iringa, Tanzania, serving as a global model.

“MORE HOUSES FOR LESS”

Through innovative construction techniques, sustainable materials, and streamlined processes, ‘More Houses, for Less’ is making the dream of homeownership a reality.

An aerial photograph of a sustainable housing development. In the foreground, a long, low building with a corrugated metal roof is visible, with several solar panels installed on it. To the left of the building, there is a large, cylindrical water storage tank. The surrounding area is lush with green vegetation, including trees and shrubs. The background shows more of the development and some distant structures. The image is framed by dark green and light green abstract shapes.

REVOLUTIONARY AFFORDABLE HOUSING

Our mission is clear: to offer affordable and sustainable housing. We're transforming the way homes are designed, constructed, and funded, with the goal of enabling more families to achieve homeownership without straining their finances.

SAVING MONEY

By combining innovative design, eco-friendly construction practices, and accessible financing options, we're making the dream of affordable and sustainable homeownership a reality for countless individuals and families.

BUILDING BONDS

The Green District is more than just a physical location; it's a visionary concept where the boundaries separating residential, work, and community areas fade into a harmonious blend, sparking a profound sense of togetherness and unparalleled synergy.
